This lecture explores how the principles of climate justice can shape Ukraine's post-war reconstruction. As the country recovers from the devastating effects of armed conflict, rebuilding efforts offer a unique opportunity to prioritize sustainable development, environmental resilience, and social equity. The session examines how climate justice can ensure that vulnerable communities such as internally displaced persons, women, and rural populations are not left behind in the rebuilding process. Drawing on international examples and Ukraine's current challenges, the lecture invites participants to critically assess the legal, environmental, and human rights dimensions of green recovery in conflict-affected settings.

Tetiana Drakhohrust is a Doctor of Law, Associate Professor, and Professor at the Department of Theory of Law and Constitutionalism, Faculty of Law, West Ukrainian National University (Ternopil, Ukraine). She is a Research Fellow at the Centre for Southeast European Studies, University of Graz. Member of International security and cooperation center at West Ukrainian National University: coordinator of international cooperation. Her areas of expertise include Migration Law, Constitutionalism, and Public International Law. She is the author of numerous scholarly publications addressing key issues of legal system development, human rights protection, and the improvement of legislative authority mechanisms.
